

Dr. Cary Supalo currently serves as a Research Developer at the Educational Testing Service (ETS). His primary responsibilities are assisting with conducting usability studies on current and new innovative high stakes tests. Additionally, he works with key stakeholders both internally and externally to promote inclusion and equity for all test takers. He also serves as an honorary professor of chemistry at the University of Sydney in Australia. There his research interests focus on making chemistry laboratory curricula more accessible for blind and vision impaired students.